Are cities for people or cars

Maria: From my point of view, streets are nowadays for cars, nevertheless, they have always belonged to people, and this is how I think it should be. No matter what, cars take part in our current lives, so that is why streets are fully equipped for them.

Laia: I agree with what this video explains, over the years cities are becoming more for transport than for people. Many streets that were without traffic are now for cars or for scooters and the people have less spaces and streets without having to worry about vehicles.

Mateo: I believe that roads are necessary for our transport, but it's true that, especially in big cities, the number of roads full of vehicles can be frustrating. Also, if there are many roads, there will be more vehicles that pollute the air.

Claudia: I think it's very good that the topic of cycling in cities is being mobilized and to stop using the car so much, as it pollutes a lot. This should be done in more cities

Leire: In my opinion, reducing the amount of cars on the streets it's a very good idea. The cars not only pollute a lot, they also make a street look less human and appear sadder.

Copenhagenization

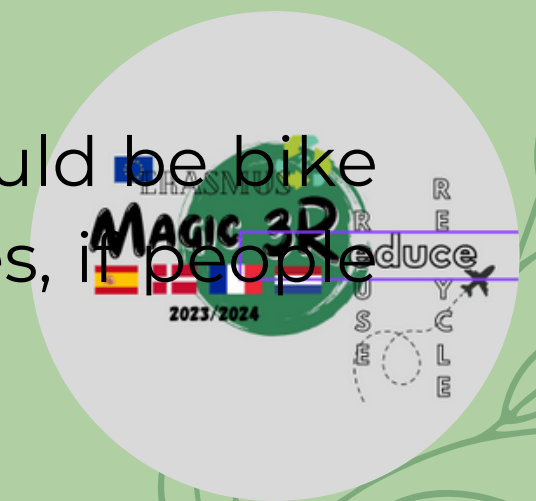

Maria: I think this is a really good idea, as it offers a healthy way to stop using cars and polluting our world. This project seems to be accepted by its population, and I think that this will be seen in a future.

Laia: I think it's a very good idea what this city wants to express to its population and that they increase the cycle lanes so that these people who go by bike can circulate in a safer and more spacious way.

Mateo: For me, this is a good idea to eliminate the use of cars and maintain better health in cities. I would love to see this around the world, especially in Spain.

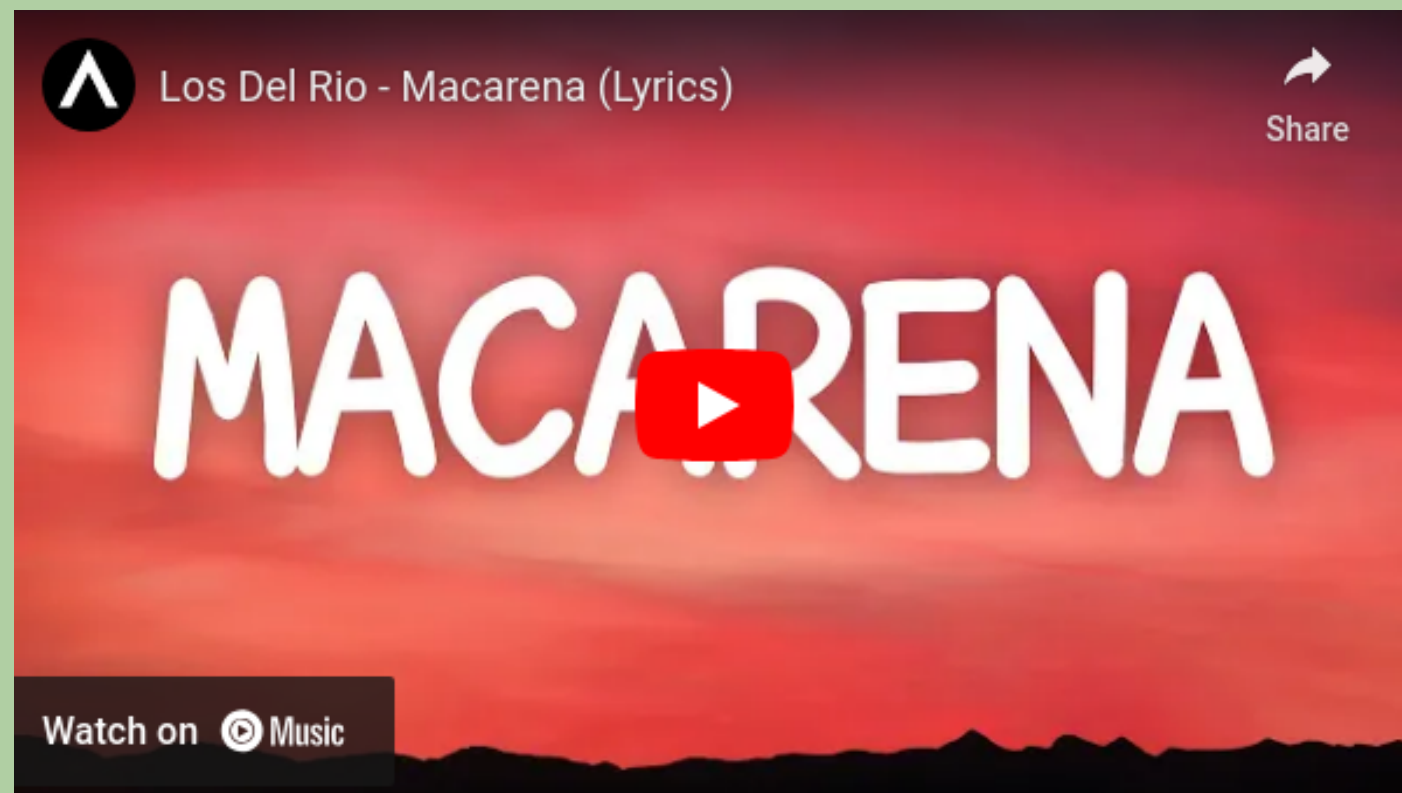

Claudia: I think it's very good that they make so many bike lanes in the streets, so cyclists can cycle more safely and more people can start cycling.

Leire: I think that this is a terrific idea, it would be perfect if in every country there would be bike lanes. In my point of view, a part of the problem is that there aren't enough bike lanes, if people find it easier to travel by riding a bike it's more possible that they do it
